FREE GOLF COMES TO THE CHICAGO GOLF SHOW

All Adult Ticket Holders to Receive a Free Round of Golf from GolfVisions

CHICAGO, Ill. (Feb. 17, 2010) – For the first time in its 27-year history, the Chicago Golf Show will give a free round of golf to every ticketed adult who attends the show, Feb. 26-28, at the Stephens Convention Center in Rosemont.

“We are very pleased to be able to offer a free round of golf to every adult with a ticket to the Chicago Golf Show,” said show operator Tom Corcoran. “The one thing we know our attendees love more than golf is free golf. This is the greatest promotion in the history of the Chicago Golf Show.”

The free golf offer comes courtesy of GolfVisions Management, Inc., a Chicago-area company that operates 10 courses in the area. Details and restrictions may be found at chicagogolfshow.com.

“We are very excited to be able to offer attendees of the 2010 Chicago Golf Show the opportunity to play golf at our courses,” said GolfVisions president and CEO Tim Miles, Sr. “We view the Chicago Golf Show free golf promotion as a way to introduce our courses to many devoted golfers who may not be familiar with all of them.”

In addition to free golf, included with admission to the Chicago Golf Show is the choice of a one-year subscription to Golf Digest magazine or a six-month subscription to Golf World (22 issues).

This year’s Chicago Golf Show will feature a Long Drive Competition sponsored by Krank Golf as well as the show’s traditional 85-foot Long Putt challenge.

As always, the Chicago Golf Show will offer huge savings for golfers looking for great deals on golf equipment, golf balls, golf shoes, and golf apparel. In addition, dozens of regional, national, and international golf destinations will be exhibiting to help golfers plan their golf getaways.
